

Emalie Parsons
WRA 210
Module 8

To reorganize my files, I renamed all of the files to start with their respective modules. If the module had several files, I renamed them to their module, followed by the specific task they completed. For example, Module 6 had several documents and I organized them by naming each module6_explanation, module6_typecard, module6_color_palette, etc. I made sure that none of my documents had any spaces, or capital letters in their name. With the new organization, it is easier to find specific information I am looking for. In addition, the consistent method of naming results in less broken links by miscoding.